Stewardship Through Education

VICTORIA'S STORY: A day in the woods sparked change back home

When Victoria, a student from West Salem High School, attended a School Outdoor Learning Experience (SOLE) for K-12 at Trees For Tomorrow, she expected to spend time outdoors. What she didn't expect was how much she would take back home.

"I learned the difference between weather and climate and more about tree species," Victoria shared. "I hope to do a 'Day of Conservation' at my school like we talked about in class. Hopefully we can normalize carpooling and conserving energy at my school."

This spark of inspiration is what Trees For Tomorrow is all about—students discovering the connections between science, stewardship, and everyday choices. With support from donors like you, hands-on learning turns into real-world action, preparing young leaders to manage and sustain our natural resources for generations to come.
